Members are not discouraged from participating, however, there are power struggles in place that hinder certain members (i.e. students) from participating confidently. For example, I was at a meeting where faculty were arguing the need to implement a new online/social interaction platform. IT staff asked how this new platform differed from software currently in use (Cranium Cafe, Zoom), but faculty appeared defensive. Someone asked what the student thought, student reported that he did not personally like it and did not think his friends would utilize it. Faculty replied with a statement about how that was the one student's opinion. It seemed to me that beause the student's opinion did not align with what faculty were pursuing, the student's opinion was dismissed. Student no longer participated for the rest of the meeting. I was uncomfortable with this interaction.

I am not sure. Is my participation valuable, yes I hope so. Does it need to go through this governance process of meeting for 2hours at a time? Maybe not always efficient.

Rotate group leadership or facilitation.

We need to focus more on how things will impact the college. We should bring more groups in to show how current technology is being used, and less on promoting new technology products.
